

God's love saves and heals hurting communities

Getting into the New Year has been an exciting blessing. We've been reminded again of the reality that reaching a lost world is a multi-faceted endeavor. I have just been in South Asia – India and Nepal – and am hugely blessed by what God is doing. On the one hand, ministry projects are developing really well. But missions can't be one thing when there is so much need and hurt in the same context. Our project in Nepal to stop human trafficking – young girls into the sex industry – is on-going proof of this.

I went with our associate team to a town just a few miles from Nepal's border with China. There we met about 50 women and girls who were graduating from the New Light Nepal anti-trafficking program. The women who come are mainly mothers, who – like mothers everywhere – desire to protect their daughters as well as their sons. Sadly, the men in the equation want sons and often try to get rid of the girls, even at young ages. Part of our program is called "Mothers Against Trafficking" or MAT. During the program, a mother told us how mothers are often totally unaware of the process taking place where the young girl – often still pre-teen – is sold to a trafficker masquerading as an "uncle" who then takes the girl on a "holiday" to cities, usually in India. The price paid for the girl is often only $200 and she is gone for good, sad to day. We are glad to say that – since the anti-trafficking project started in 2007 – more than 10,000 mothers and girls have been alerted to the evil ploy they might soon face in their homes and villages. We have heard from a ministry in Mumbai, India, that some brothels are closing because the trafficked supply of girls from Nepal is greatly diminished.

Mothers and girls at our ant-trafficking project in Nepal.

Also in Nepal a new project designed to see thousands of new house churches develop among the Maithali-speaking people is now getting underway, In India, the project to plant a church in every village is gaining momentum. So much to report!! Exciting times as God moves to do great things. THANK YOU for praying and standing with us. God is doing exceptional and very exciting things!!

In Christ

Ted and Judy

We thank the Lord for you!

Global Fellowship, PO Box 1, Meadow Vista CA 95722
Web: Globalfellowship.org E-mail: Tedmolsen@gmail.com

THANK YOU – IN HUGE
MEASURE!!